The slab

BY TONY BOUZA

On Nov. 28, 2020, The New York Times reported the discovery of a 12-foot steel monolith in the desert called Red Rock Country, Utah. It described it as evocative of Stanley Kubrick's 1968 film "2001: A Space Odyssey." In that film primates howl around an unexplained monolith. Amazing. Stupendous. And inspirational.

What did it mean?

I've always thought Kubrick to be America's foremost directorial genius and not only saw all his flicks (including the unknown "Fear and Desire") but thought long and hard about every one.

In "A Clockwork Orange" he warns us of the evils and dangers of conditioning and uses Beethoven (my hero) to illustrate the point. In "Paths of Glory" we see cynicism in the use of war. In "Spartacus" he uses a communist's book (Howard Fast), brings back Dalton Trumbo and depicts class struggle and the charms of slavery. And on and on. Back to the mono-

How environmental policies can reduce crime

BY ELINA KOLSTAD

"Defund the Police" has sparked a nationwide debate, the likes of which we have not seen before, about what a safe community looks like and how we achieve that for ALL of our residents. The vast majority of people in Minneapolis support redirecting funds from the MPD to violence prevention programs, mental health and drug treatment. Another important aspect of the conversation is to examine root causes of crime in the first place. Pollutants, such as lead, have a direct impact on crime as is demonstrated by both econometric studies and physiological evidence of how lead impacts brain development as is laid out in detail in Kevin Drum's 2013 article "Lead: America's Real Criminal Element."

It has long been recognized that poverty and crime are linked. But a 2019 study from Harvard identified "toxicity, violence, and incarceration" as significant factors of poverty that increase the chances of adult incarceration. Some may be surprised that the study indicates that environmental policies, specifically those that reduce pollutants in communities, could significantly reduce crime rates.

The Hennepin Energy

Recovery Center (HERC) burns trash in downtown Minneapolis. Incinerators like this spew massive amounts of air pollution from chemicals like nitrogen oxide to heavy metals like lead and mercury. Community members have been fighting to close HERC for years. There are a number of roadblocks to closing down HERC, but it may surprise some that our excessive throwaway culture is not the only factor. The incinerator produces energy—specifically energy that can be categorized as "clean." Both of these are serious environmental concerns, but there are alternatives. In addition to increasing the

NENA reconsidered

BY ED FELIEN

Last month in our Nokomis edition we published a notice we found on the Nokomis East Neighborhood Association (NENA) website about a new program they were planning: Nokomis East Neighbor-to-Neighbor Communication Project. We felt this could be a very useful community resource.

Who could disagree with their organizing principle: "NENA believes every person has the right to a safe, healthy home, and a welcoming community that values Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion."

Their strategies seemed a bit muddled. They begin by saying, "This is not a crime prevention or safety project," and end by saying they will "inform Block Club Leaders and encourage them to share with their blocks, communication and safety resources developed for Nokomis East, and government resources at the city, county, and state levels."

But we felt any program that increases communication between neighbors during the current crime wave was a good thing and should be supported.

We got a very angry response from Becky

Timm, the Executive Director of NENA. She said we should have talked to her first before publishing things from their website.

Like so many projects begun at NENA, the Neighbor-to-Neighbor Communication Project seems to have faded away. I could find no trace of it now on their website or on their Facebook page. They have three standing committees working on projects, but minutes from those meetings are lost somewhere in cyberspace. The Housing, Commercial & Street-scape Committee is on hiatus, but they have a 2020 budget of $29,550. Wednesday, Dec. 16, 2020, was the final NENA free food and supply distribution. They have been giving

Winter Wellness

The art of winter wellness

BY DEBRA KEEFER RAMAGE

Oh, great. Not only is it winter, but it's in the peak of a terrible pandemic. And you want to talk about wellness? Is that some kind of sick joke? When the conditions are most stacked against your goal, that's not when you give up, it's when you sharpen your game. Especially if your game is literally staying alive, and keeping your near and dear ones safe as well.

Most of the tips here for winter wellness have nothing to do with the pandemic, specifically. Many of these tips help prevent colds, flu, digestive problems or aching muscles. Some will protect against depression, poor balance, cognitive decline, degenerative diseases, lack of energy, headaches or heart ailments. And if they also lessen your chances of catching COVID-19, or protect you from the worst ravages if you do catch it, so much the better. Let us break down the art for you.

Food

A famous Ayurvedic proverb says it best: "When diet is wrong, medicine is of no use. When diet is correct, medicine is of no need." And by diet, I—and the Ayurvedic sages—don't mean some artificial composition like "paleo" or "low fat." We just mean "everything that you eat." That's your diet.

That being said, many traditions of healthy eating, both ancient and modern, have prescriptions. Nowadays we can (at some expense) do sophisticated testing to see how each person's body system respond to various foods.

In general, eat what is local to where you live, what is in season, what is traditional with your own people. But also try things that are traditional to other people and see how they affect you. Don't eat anything you can't pronounce or don't know (at least theoretically) how to produce if you had to.

Many of the trendiest foods in restaurants and spas are ridiculously easy to make for yourself. Rice bowls, which can be based on any grain, not just rice, are an example. No special equipment required. Here's one to try: facebook.com/deborama/posts/10159077187806204.

Citrus juices are very low-tech to make. For more high-tech juices, such as apple, pear, celery, greens and so on, a juicer will make them achievable, and lacking that, it may be possible with a blender and a sieve. (If a jar blender is too big an investment, try a stick blender—great for soup too.)

Oh, yes! Soups are another thing you can make at home for very little money. You can find excellent recipes with a two-minute Google. My go-to healthy soups include a vegetarian borscht, a Basque-style fish soup similar to bouillabaisse, a vegan miso-based hot-and-sour soup, and a gluten-free version of minestrone with spaghetti squash, cannellini beans and lacinato kale.

Remember—if you're trying to avoid going out in public due to COVID, check out the meal kits, market boxes and delivery service sections of Southside Pride's What's Open page.

Good winter foods and drinks:

- Fruits - citrus of all kinds and cranberries for vitamin C; avocado and banana for minerals; dried figs, prunes, dates for fiber
- Vegetables - greens, especially the cruciferous ones - broccoli, cauliflower, brussels sprouts (try them roasted in olive oil)
- Herbs - for salads, the bitter ones "cleanse the liver" (arugula, mustard, watercress)
- Roots and tubers - potatoes, rutabaga, parsnips, beets, sweet potatoes, yams, carrots, turnips and celeriac Affordable!
- Whole grains like brown rice, millet, barley and oats, and seeds similar to grains such as wild rice, amaranth and quinoa
- Wild-caught fish - walleye, salmon, trout and more Note - one of the reasons I love the delivery service Imperfect Foods is their great bargains on wild seafoods (imprfct.us/v/Debra_2).
- Beans and peas and legumes - lentils, navy beans, black beans, fava beans, green peas, black-eyed peas, pigeon peas Affordable!
- Spices - Load up with garlic, ginger, turmeric, cayenne, cinnamon. Many are anti-inflammatory, and some can clear your head of sinus congestion.
- Tea - herbal or green or black. Try iced hibiscus for a refresher. Affordable!
- Ferments - kimchi, sauerkraut, curtido, pickles, tempeh, miso, tamari. Drinks like kvaas, kombucha, or switchel if that's your thing. Yogurt and kefir, dairy or non.

Exercise

The easiest thing is to run, bike or walk (if you can). With a bike you can cover more ground, see the sights, soak up nature. Walking is more contemplative, slower. Contemplative is good.

For questions about walking, running or biking—like preventing foot pain, or how to integrate this time into your routine, or the best shoes—there are a lot of resources online. Join an online club and share experiences. Prevention magazine is a big booster of walking for health and a good resource.

Indoor exercise routines are a thing, of course. If COVID-19 closes off the health club possibility, you can develop your own routine at home. Or use an online class; these are exploding right now. Some are free, some are the temporary replacement for gym-based workouts and require a membership, and some are not free but quite affordable. They range from beginner to advanced, from "boot camps" to Immunity is a complex topic, which I cannot do justice to in this limited space. A few resources at the end are given if you want to dive into it.

Immunity

The main thing about resistance to disease is that it's a combination of the hand you're dealt genetically, and various inputs throughout your life, including the diet and exercise already discussed, but also factors like mental health, sleep, and externals such as air quality or community health.

All we'll address here are a few simple life factors and externals that you have at least partial control over, and that you likely already know about, but may need occasional reminders.

- Light, fresh air, temperature - these can all make a huge difference. Try to keep your home as cool as you feel comfortable with, and if the air is dry, use a humidifier or gently simmer a big pot of water on the stove. Consider a light box or full spectrum lamp if natural light is not enough. Try to get outside in all but the most beastly of weather, and air out your home when the cold spell breaks.
- Sleep - practice good sleep hygiene. Find out your optimal amount and time of sleep and ingrain that as a habit. Only use your bed for sleep and sex, not eating, watching TV or reading. Also it helps (it really does, I tried it) to keep your bedroom tidy and make your bed every day.

- Good digestion is key to good immune function. See Food, above. Also, as with sleep, try to develop regular habits around food, and only eat when you're hungry. Identify and eliminate foods you can't

- digest easily.
- Mental health is also key to immunity. So don't neglect that aspect.
- Some resources for learning more about immunity: Books - "An Elegant Defense: The Extraordinary New Science of the Immune System," by Matt Richter and "In Defense of Self: How the Immune System Really Works," by William R. Clark; Magazine - Life Extension (also has a website); Website - NIH website on immunology research www.niaid.nih.gov/research/immune-system-research.

Mental Health

The thing about these tips is that they're all connected. For instance, poor sleep will affect your mental health, and your immune system, even though you mainly feel it in your body. So, enjoying food, sleeping, exercising in a spirit of play rather than duty, hanging out with your goofy cat or dog, and having a community of kind people, may all contribute to mental health.

But, if there is such a thing as a one-size-fits-all remedy for poor mental health, in my opinion that would be mindfulness. Whatever mental issues you are diagnosed with, or even if you're not diagnosed at all, can't afford treatment, aren't sure, feel pretty OK most of the time but not perfect, a mindfulness practice will help, without interfering with other things.

We're very lucky to have several local meditation or mindfulness centers in the Twin Cities (one of which was cited in the Exercise section above.) Also, mindfulness is offered as a mental health treatment by many health centers.

As with online exercise, apps and videos offering all types of guided meditations abound. You can't play a silly game on your phone these days without getting tons of ads for Headspace, Calm, Aura, Sat-tva or 10% Happier. These all cost something, so if that's an issue, an approach I recommend is to find a buddy or small mutual support group, and just do it. Maybe use a book for instruction, like the classic "Zen Mind, Beginner's Mind," by Shunryu Suzuki.

Even though mindfulness is associated with spiritual practices or religious paths, it is not in itself a spiritual practice and is accessible to agnostics toward any and all belief systems. The only thing you have to believe is that you have a mind. That's pretty basic. (Of course, some people also find that a spiritual practice is another avenue to better mental health.)

Notes from the desk of peace activist Polly Mann (b. Nov. 19, 1919)

Mexican children incarcerated at the U.S. border

Some Central American children coming into the United States are being stopped at the border and are being returned by the U.S. Border Patrol to Mexico or placed in custody. The transfer is contrary to both U.S. policy and an outstanding diplomatic agreement with Mexico, which does not allow children from other countries who are traveling without adult guardians to be returned to Mexico. However, the Trump administration has shut down the border to most asylum applicants because of the coronavirus. The number of children expelled is unclear because the Mexican government has not provided such information. A border patrol agent stated that his agency had been directed to contact the Mexican consular office each time an unauthorized child who was not Mexican was expelled. Lawyers from KIND, an immigrant advocacy organization, reported some Central American children were expelled into Mexico and were still there. Some parents have had to wait days or weeks to find out if their children, without their consent, were still in custody there.

How to reform the MPD

Dear Tony Bouza,

I enjoy your columns and respect your expertise and vision as both a police chief and a commentator.

I have several suggestions to make for reform of the Minneapolis Police Department.

First, I would like to see the City of Minneapolis require police officers to live in the city. They are city employees. Local residents pay taxes to pay police wages. Instead, over 90 percent of Minneapolis police live outside the city and pay property taxes to those jurisdictions, which do not require any services from them. When they live here, like other residents, they become part of their neighborhoods, attend our churches and mosques, send their kids to our schools, and know the people they are living among, the good and the bad. Their 24/7 presence would be a deterrent to crime that a 10-hour shift four times a week is not. The police union has succeeded in getting the state legislature to legislate permission for police to live outside the city. I would like to see that law changed, even if it requires some sort of salary incentive or stipend to police to get it done.

Next, I support measures that would require more transparency in arrests, the use of weapons, public disclosure of misconduct and sanctions and dismissal for unlawful and/or improper police behavior. At one time, we had a citizen police review board. It didn't work. I think what is needed is more on the professional administrative level. Body cams are a great step forward in meeting this concern.

Best wishes,

Dan Cohen, former president of the Minneapolis City Council and the Minneapolis Planning Commission; current member, Minneapolis Charter Commission city's recycling and composting they could pursue serious zero waste strategies, especially in commercial and manufacturing applications which is where the term originated. As for green energy production, rooftop solar offers an excellent alternative if we are willing to prioritize it.

The Phillips Urban Farm has been fighting for the past couple of years to use an existing structure for aquaponics to provide food for the community as well as building affordable housing on the site. The city, however, has other plans. They have aggressively stood in the way of the community organizers every step of the way and plan to consolidate the Public Works Water Distribution Maintenance and Meter Shop operation to one site, instead of the three separate sites where they are now housed. While the city highlights "green" aspects of the project such as LEED certification, these seem a bit like greenwashing when compared to the community-driven proposal of the East Phillips Urban Farm. Especially given concerns that the city's plan will increase emissions through increased traffic and that the demolition process will aerosolize the arsenic pollution on the site.

In both of these cases it is argued that, while these actions can be harmful to some of our city's residents, the overall benefits to the city make the sacrifice worth it. Keep in mind that these are not people who live in these communities. These arguments are not being made from a position of personal sacrifice, but from a position of the sacrifices that others should make—often these others are the least empowered and enfranchised of us.

We must start to look at remediation and prevention of pollution as being a priority for our city. But even if we could magically clean up all of the toxicity of our city overnight it wouldn't decrease crime overnight. It is exposure to toxins during early childhood development that increases crime rates and simply cleaning up the environment cannot undo the damage. This is where "defund the police" comes in, with more funding to programs that will reduce crime in the shorter term. This includes decriminalizing mental illness, homelessness and substance abuse. It also means investing in early childhood and youth programs that can identify children who have suffered developmental damage from their environment and divert them from criminal behavior.

We have a problem with crime in our city. We've had a problem with crime in our city. I grew up in "Murderapolis." I've lived through ebbs and flows of violence over the years. Yes, crime is worse now than it has been, at least for a while; we are also facing one of the most challenging times in our nation's history and a huge economic recession, if not depression. But even in the "good times," crime was happening. Policing as it exists was never the solution and it's not now.

Becky Timm sent out a dire warning to people in Nokomis East earlier this fall: "We need your help to keep NENA in operation and serving our four neighborhoods. This is the time to Use Your Voice to speak up for our community! This fall, the Minneapolis City Council is considering drastic cuts to funding for neighborhood organizations like NENA. If the proposal moves forward, NENA's annual allocation will be cut by 40 percent on Jan. 1, 2021. Over the next three years, NENA's funding will shrink from $80K, to $60K, and then bottom out at $40K."

I was alarmed enough to check their budget and found that out of a 2020 budget of $353,606, staff salaries were $211,773 for the executive director and community organizer. [My difficulty in trying to find accurate figures is detailed in "Bloat," on page 15 of this edition.]

lith in "2001."

Clearly produced by humans, but who? A vanished civilization. Where did they go? Kubrick tells us.

To emphasize his point, he shows us another monolith on another planet.

In "2001" he has a brilliant astronaut easily defeated in a chess game with the computer "Hal."

The machine is clearly frustrated by the lack of control over feckless humans who are clearly his inferiors.

So, what does Hal do?

He kills the crew to assert control.

Man, in his insatiable quest for progress, creates a machine smarter than himself. The machine, though, cannot reproduce. It can only seek, gain control but vanish into extinction in the fullness of time. One time reference speaks of "millions of years."

The lone survivor hurtles through space faster than the speed of light. As Einstein reminds us, this reverses time, and the astronaut, at the end, is a baby.

Now you know why I think Kubrick is a surpassing genius (assuming I am right). Of course, I ought to entertain the possibility that the police union is right—that I am a moron.

A humbling thought—and very possibly, true.

And "Lolita" doesn't contain even one sexy scene. Now that is an achievement.

Still, imagine the event—a brilliant artist conceives a Kubrickian echo, has it secretly and laboriously embedded in Utah's desert, swears his many helpers to silence and patiently awaits its discovery.

I am floored!

— On Friday night, Nov. 27, four men and a wheelbarrow removed the mysterious monolith.

Immigration history and stories of origin

Monday, Dec. 21, 6:30-7:30 p.m.— National and local immigration landscape

Monday, Dec. 28, 6:30-8 p.m.— Action planning

ECMN, in partnership with Minnesota Sanctuary State Coalition, is offering a three-part orientation for individuals and faith communities looking to engage the Sanctuary State movement, and work for justice in the immigration system. These 3 sessions, offered online, will help you learn more about the history, listen to the stories of those directly affected by ICE and current immigration policy, and build a bridge between public policy and Jesus' the Way of Love, as we move towards the Beloved Community.

ECMN and our allies are committed to renaming the Whipple Building, encouraging the State of Minnesota to become a sanctuary state as promised by the governor, and to engage in supporting change in our federal immigration policy. Rice cookers and coats for refugees

As we move towards 2021 with hope, we at the Minnesota Council of Churches anticipate a rebuilding of the refugee resettlement program and are preparing to welcome new families. One of our most critical supplies is rice cookers, and we are totally out. Families prefer medium and large capacity rice cookers. We are also in need of large frying pans and kettles with lids to furnish apartments for our newest neighbors. If you would prefer to order these items online, you can have them shipped directly to our office (please just include a gift note with your name so we can thank you!). We also continue to accept warm winter coats in the following sizes: girls 10-12; 14-16, boys 7-8; 10-12, women's medium, men's small and medium. For more information, please contact rsvolunteers@mnchurches.org. Thank you!

Braver Angels

From St. Mark's Episcopal Cathedral: As an extension of St. Mark's work around "courageous conversations" and bridging the political divide, we are continuing our partnership with Braver Angels and engaging in their "With Malice Toward None" efforts specifically designed for faith communities. "With Malice Toward None" is an initiative to heal America in the aftermath of the 2020 election outcome. In the meantime, there are many opportunities to participate in building skills and conversation with people of differing political views, as well as being curious about our own personal biases. Events are open to all and held online. For more information, go to <https://braverangels.org/what-we-do/with-malice-toward-none/>.

Holidays are holy

BY DEBRA KEEFER RAMAGE

“You don’t know what you’ve got till it’s gone,” Joni Mitchell famously sang. I have been thinking about the many local delights that are gone, or may be soon.

In 2016 I was still working for Heart of the Beast Theatre. We put on “La Navidad” that December. Two years later, after I retired and left, there was a one-off Winter Solstice show called “The Longest Night.” There was no show at all in December of 2019. This year, after a year without even the MayDay Parade, HOBT is on furlough for an indeterminate length of time. I hope I’m wrong, but it seems to be shrinking away.

Of course, this story is repeated many times, across the Twin Cities, across the Midwest, across the country and around the world. As we are being battered by climate chaos, poverty for many more induced by a yawning and growing chasm of wealth disparity, the almost inevitable growth of reckless extremists, including resurgent fascism, and then this year, the one-two punch of COVID-19 and its associated structural economic depression—cultural riches that were based on voluntarism and crowds (healthy people) and property values and philanthropy (wealthy people) are being starved out of existence.

We took these things for granted, and we should not have. Now that we have worked through the pain of surrendering them (if we have), along with restaurant dining, parties in bars, family get-togethers, Big Sports, and cautiously trusting our governments and corporations, we should probably ask ourselves: What things are we still taking for granted that will be snatched away from us next? The internet? The entertainment industry? The food distribution system? The power grid? Running water? The theoretical rule of law?

In a way, the plagues of the past were not as terrifying as this one, even though they could and sometimes did fall to the rock bottom (the Black Death of mid-14th century Europe killed something between 30 and 60 percent of the population in just four years). Rock bottom is still the same place, but the heights we fall from are much greater.

At this point you’re probably asking yourself why on earth I started out an article titled “Holidays are Holy” with five paragraphs about pain and loss, culminating with the Black Death. The reason is I am leading up to a discussion of refreshment. Not refreshments, like cookies and cold drinks, but refreshing, reloading, starting

Consider the Black Death, for example. That was a horrible calamity, probably beyond our ability to comprehend. But for the survivors, it was the dawn of a new era. With the population so drastically reduced, it became a time when the rich could only get labor from the poor by giving them wages of real value. The peasantry, who had previously been little more than slaves, began to build modest wealth. This led first to the decline of the feudal system, and ultimately to the so-called Enlightenment and the Industrial Revolution in the next three centuries.

This is illustrative of a

Refugees ('Flight into Egypt' by Botticelli) sweeping historical phenomenon documented by Walter Scheidel in his book "The Great Leveler." His inescapably argued hypothesis (at least inescapable if you don't go back before about 800 B.C.E.—more on that in the next paragraph) is that wealth inequality always rises in the context of a civilization at its breaking point, and it is only reversed by violence, which he divides into four broad outcomes: war (example: WWI), revolution or civil war (example: the fall of Rome), environmental catastrophe (example: the destruction of the Mayans), and plague (example: The Black Death).

To lead into the subject of reset buttons, and 800 B.C.E., we need to look at a later, and not as popular, book: Michael Hudson's "...and forgive them their debts." The hypothesis this book sets out is that in the ancient civilizations that preceded the democracy of Athens, the wise men and rulers understood something that those great "civilization founders" of Greece and Rome denied or forgot: that wealth inequality, once it starts, will grow inexorably to the point of collapse, and all will come to a violent end, unless you hit the reset button.

Now, these civilizations were ruled by godlike tyrants, whereas Greece, and Rome at its start, espoused the more "modern" ideals of meritocracy and "freedom." John Siman, writing for nakedcapitalism.com, both interviews Hudson and reviews the book. Hudson tells him, about the various civilizations in Mesopotamia, "[These] societies were not interested in equality, but they were civilized. And they possessed the financial sophistication to understand that interest on loans increases exponentially, while economic growth at best follows an S-curve. This means that debtors will, if not protected by a central authority, end up becoming permanent bondservants to their creditors. So Mesopotamian kings regularly rescued debtors who were getting crushed by their debts."

The Egyptians and the Israelites did this too, most likely. Pharaoh thought he could renege on the deal and keep the Israelites in permanent slavery. We are pretty sure the Israelites that came out of Egypt kept the rule and even codified it to be the Jubilee—every 49 years—even though they never had a great empire or a very powerful king.

I originally set out to write this piece as an examination of themes of refugees and victims of injustice in the context of winter holidays. I considered the story of Herod's "slaughter of the innocents" and how that drove the Holy Family into refugee status in Egypt. I discovered this excellent piece about how Hanukkah became a holiday of special meaning for former refugees settling in America, and thus a specifically American style of Hanukkah developed. (See <https://www.tenement.org/blog/our-american-holiday-refugees-and-the-meaning-of-hanukkah/>.)

thing is still missing from the picture. I had been recently (for obvious reasons) ruminating on these themes of collapse and what Hudson calls the Clean Slate Amnesty. And I had this thought—what if many of our holidays, not just the winter ones, not just the Abrahamic religious ones, but our very concept of “holy days,” have a concealed meaning that points to a new (but ancient?) paradigm of freedom?

This is what Siman has to say to paraphrase Hudson's conclusions about the post-800 B.C.E. misinterpretation of the idea of freedom:

“In ancient Mesopotamian societies it was understood that freedom was preserved by protecting debtors. In what we call Western Civilization, ... just the opposite ... has been the case: For us freedom has been understood to sanction the ability of creditors to demand payment from debtors without restraint or oversight. “This is the freedom to cannibalize society ... the freedom to enslave ... the freedom proclaimed by the Chicago School and the mainstream of American economists. And so Hudson emphasizes that our Western notion of freedom has been, for some 28 centuries now, Orwellian in the most literal sense of the word: War is Peace • Freedom is Slavery • Ignorance is Strength ...

“... Our neoliberal notion of unrestricted freedom for the creditor dooms us at the very outset of any quest we undertake for a just economic order. Any and every revolution that we wage, no matter how righteous in its conception, is destined to fail.

“And we are so doomed, Hudson says, because we have been morally blinded by 28 centuries of ... decontextualized history. The true roots of Western Civilization lie not in the Greek polis ... but in the Bronze Age Mesopotamian societies..."

So, to get back to holiness and holidays, I am considering that for a holiday to have some deep connection to the ancient concept of Jubilee, or its equivalence in other lost civilizations, it has to have a message that privileges real freedom—i.e., freedom from want, fear or bondage—as opposed to the licentious freedom of enslavers and predators. So, any holiday about Jesus, with a slight stretch and a caveat, can qualify. The caveat is you have to consider the actual Jesus who said “forgive them their debts” and not revise that to merely meaning forgiving so-called “trespassers.”

And another holiday that clearly qualifies is Passover, since it is literally about freeing people from bondage. (That’s why I don’t want to artificially restrict this to winter holidays.) But then again, both winter solstice holidays, and new year holidays—Rosh Hashanah, Tet, Saturnalia in ancient Rome, all the many new year days around the many cultures and calendars—all qualify too. Winter solstice and the beginning of a new year almost always have a powerful theme of what Hudson termed Clean Slate Amnes-ties.

I’m pretty sure the secular holy day of January 1, 2021, is going to be a time when many yearn for a Clean Slate. I intend to meditate and pray, to take out all my trash, sweep my floors and make lists. I will try to repair every flaw and breach in my life, and if anyone owes me any money (ha!) I am going to forgive them. But mostly I am sending up an intention and prayer that at some point, our “democratic” rulers get the message and proclaim a Jubilee, before it’s too late.

Because you don’t know what you’ve got till it’s gone.

Does the Park Board really care what we think?

BY KATHRYN KELLY

Results of the latest Minneapolis Park Board survey on the Hiawatha Golf Course Master Plan have, again, shown that a HUGE majority of respondents do not support a plan that has, so far, cost over $870,000.

The responses have been compiled and quantified in a best effort considering the vast variety of comments from over 400 responses. The numbers indicate how many responses were received on that particular comment. The top 15 responses were:

- 196 People want to retain the 18-hole golf course
- 41 Reject Master Plan / bad plan / waste of money / cost too high / put plan on hold
- 38 Honor Black golfers by retaining the 18-hole golf course

33 9-hole golf course is unsustainable / money loser / beginners only / insufficient for demand

29 Plans for water mitigation/protection of homes are questionable / ill-defined / won't work / need more study

29 Amenities already exist in the Hiawatha/Nokomis parks or can be done nearby

26 Want golf course there for my kids / kids in general

23 A diverse golf course (users are all races, ages, genders...)

22 18-hole golf course is a neighborhood institution

22 Redesign / upgrade current 18-hole golf course / facilities

20 Support the plan

20 Put money toward more needed areas / areas in disrepair / existing infrastructure

17 Only golf course in the city proper / inner city

16 Save the parks at 43rd & 19th and 44th & Longfellow

15 Will be less property for other activities—only golf and water in summer

15 Fix trash problem first (separately)

This survey, again, shows clearly that a HUGE majority of the respondents who stated a preference want the Park Board to retain the 18-hole golf course (196 responses), growing from 157 in the April 2020 survey. Plus, the view that the plan disrespects the Black community and its history at Hiawatha Golf Course is very clear in the survey results. These results also show

Park Board bureaucrats: See no people; Hear no people; Speak to no people that there is opposition from the neighborhood with respect to changes across the street from homes. This opposition comes from worries about protecting the homes from flooding, increased traffic, usurping the parks to accommodate the new golf course due to major portions of the property being converted to a lake, and the addition of storm sewers, pumps and snow-making equipment across the street from homes.

There was, again, considerable concern expressed about the proposed financing of the project, especially in this time frame of COVID and economic distress. Many people feel this project should be postponed, or that it is a waste of money, and the proposed $42-62 million that would be spent could be put to better uses.

It is finally time for the Park Board to bow to the majority of the survey respondents and quit wasting money on this plan. Instead, maintain the 18-hole golf course while incorporating some of the desired amenities and fixes into the current property.

Hey hey, ho ho, Gov'nor Walz has got to go!

BY ELINA KOLSTAD

In the month of November, Gov. Walz made two missteps that should cost him any chance at reelection. His administration deployed excessive force to a protest on I-94 and approved the 401 water crossings permit for the Enbridge Energy Line 3 pipeline replacement project.

On Nov. 4, 2020, the Twin Cities Coalition for Justice 4 Jamar held a protest as part of a national call for protests no matter who won the election. They were kettled by police and Minnesota State Patrol troopers, and 646 people were arrested. For perspective, this is more than double the number of protesters arrested on the first day of the RNC back in 2008. Protesters have been "taking the freeway" or marching on the freeway and blocking traffic to bring attention to unarmed Black people brutalized and murdered by the police for a number of years now. Instead of working to solve this problem, Gov. Walz would seem to see the protests themselves as the problem. Instead of stopping the murder and abuse of his citizens, the people who elected him, he sees the need to criminalize protest and erode our First Amendment rights.

Many reading this might assume that there isn't much that the governor can do to address the concerns of groups like Black Lives Matter, but there are many areas where he can have an impact, such as advocating for criminal justice reform and policies of decriminalization and/or legalization of substances like marijuana at the state level. At the very least he could not have the Minnesota State Patrol troopers aggressively target those fighting for racial justice.

Just over ten days after the incident on I-94, Walz's administration approved a Line 3 water crossings permit, thereby moving the Enbridge Energy project forward. This move puts the health of our waterways at risk, harms tribal communities, and will increase greenhouse gas emissions. The fact that this approval was given in Native American Heritage Month seems a bit like an added slap in the face to this outsider. Even Lt. Gov. Peggy Flanagan had to distance herself from such shameful action on the part of her administration.

The environmental and human costs of the proposed pipeline are numerous. From an environmental perspective they span everything from inevitable leaks from the pipeline into waterways to the increased greenhouse gas emissions that will result from the movement of tar sands fuel into the market. The human costs are more devastating. Indigenous populations in the U.S. and Minnesota specifically have been especially hard hit in our current pandemic, in large part due to historic and systemic mistreatment at the hands of the U.S. government. Enbridge will bring hundreds of workers into northern Minnesota. These workers will be coming from all over the country and many will bring Covid with them. The influx of workers from out of state also increases the risk of kidnapping and human trafficking to Indigenous women in the region. As far back as 2016, Patti Larsen, of Mending the Sacred Hoop, said, "Follow the pipeline through, you follow the construction workers, you follow the money, you follow the oil—you'll start seeing where the trafficking will follow that."

These two actions on the part of Gov. Walz's administration

The battleground that is Lake Street

“We are in pain, don’t choke us.” —Ira Azhakh

BY KAY SCHROVEN

Despite ambitious efforts by the city and a Neighborhood Action Plan to reimagine Lake Street, Ira is not hopeful. After 40 years in the car business in the 4500 block of East Lake Street, he has closed. Before the year was half over, the pandemic and the destruction surrounding the riots in the wake of the killing of George Floyd by the MPD caused Ira to let his guys go and close shop. He has had a “For Lease” sign up for months with no takers. “People are shying away from Lake Street. Small businesses especially are not confident that it is a place to invest.” Ira points out that this is not just about him, it’s about the community of small businesses on or near Lake Street—the varied and needed small businesses that have called East Lake Street home for years, even decades: restaurants, hair and nail salons, coffee shops, laundromats, car sales and repair, small ethnic groceries.

The hangover after closing his business is painful and involves physical and financial damage. His current debt is $10,102.90, itemized below.

Ira shows up to our meeting with documents tucked into his pocket. Before he pulls them out, we chat a bit about the unique and trying summer that Minneapolis has experienced. Ira points out that he is not politically oriented and has a great deal of empathy for George Floyd’s family and the Black Lives Matter movement as well as all marginalized groups including immigrants, a demographic he is part of. He is especially concerned about his fellow merchants suffering the same aftermath that he is. Ira simply wants to continue working and making a living as he has been for decades. We review his documents.

The Documents
- Document #1 is his property tax statement from the city announcing a 52.8% increase (2021 over 2020). Yes, 52.8%! $8,375.18.

- Document #2 is his utility bill from the city: $1,096.72 (the bill notes “a meter is reporting zero usage”).

- Document #3 is his license renewal: $455.00.

- Document #4 is a fee for inspection: $176.00.

Total $10,102.90

Ira forwards a voicemail to me that he received from the city in response to his inquiry about his 2021 proposed property tax with its unusually high increase. A soft voice explains that his property has been compared to like properties and assessed accordingly. She further assures him that such large increases will not follow 2021, implying that this is a one-time, isolated charge. Discussing this call with Ira he asks, “To what and where is the comparison being made? Is it to like properties on East Lake Street? Minnetonka? West Hollywood? Rodeo Drive? What is the context?” So far, this question has not been answered.

With no business for many months, Ira cannot afford to pay up. He took some reasonable steps to assuage the situation. He had no-longer-needed utilities turned off. He improved his second building (next door) with the intention of working out of it. Miraculously this one had survived the riots. This did not turn out when his Ward 2 City Council member informed him that he could not go in this direction. Ira does not quite understand the reasons, but assumes it has to do with zoning, future zoning, future plans.

So, what are the future plans for East Lake Street? As early as 2000 there was an East Lake Street Corridor Study conducted referencing 36th Avenue to the Mississippi River. The Lake Street Task Force published its vision for Lake Street, which included public realm improvements, development of mixed businesses (retail at ground level with living and office space above), a lively pedestrian thoroughfare, attracting quality developers, improving safety and the appearance of the street, strengthening existing desirable businesses, etc. Included in the list of challenges are “numerous parking lots and auto-oriented businesses.” Shall we assume that auto-oriented businesses are undesirable? Ira’s response to this information is, “If the city wants us to go away, why not simply tell us and stop playing games?” But then there is a long history of playing games. After all, this is originally Dakota and Ojibwe land.

Lake Street has a long, prosperous, rich history dating back to 1856. It began as a narrow dirt road with a few homes and businesses such as Harvester Works, Freeman’s Dept. Store, The Oddfellows Hall, Petersons Drug Store, Podany’s Furniture and Hotel Woodland. It was shaped and influenced by Natives and immigrants, African Americans, Yankees from the East Coast, and Europeans. They came for cheap land and natural resources. They cut timber to escape slavery, starvation, war and the class systems of their homelands. Lake Street was home to prominent bicycle trails (1880s) and smart carriages and horses. By 1905 the trains came and by 1908 it was paved. Did you know that Lake Street was once known as “Automobile Row”? The first car arrived in 1896, and by the late 1920s Lake Street had become a showcase for automobiles. With its miles of fluorescent lighting, it was often compared to Le Cours Vincennes Boulevard in Paris, Bond Street in London and famous streets of Rio de Janeiro and West Germany. I’ve been told that as recently as the 1960s it was a strip where you could show off your car and rendezvous with friends and strangers.

Like Ira, many Lake Street merchants and local residents do not want gentrification or displacement. They do not want “Uptown.” They want to preserve the character, the multicultural and ethnic nature of the area, full of choices and experiences not found in other parts of the city. In the aftermath of George Floyd’s death and the ensuing riots, city officials designated Lake Street as “one of seven cultural districts to promote racial equality, preserve cultural identity and promote economic growth.” Yet, some have been forced to leave as the system grinds through legislation, committees and task forces focused on what to do about Lake Street. Maya Santamaria moved her Spanish language radio station (La Raza Radio, which has been around for 20 years) to Richfield where her agent was able to find appropriate space. Ruhel Islam of Gandhi Mahal Restaurant was fortunate to find temporary space with a neighbor. This way he can continue with takeout food, now known as Curry in a Hurry. Those who are unable or unwilling to continue on Lake Street represent a loss to Minneapolis. Without immediate relief, more may be forced to leave. We hear and read about relief funds: Lake St. Council Recovery Fund, Urban Ventures, The Promise Act, etc. On Nov. 24, Gov. Walz and House Republicans released separate economic relief plans to help small businesses and workers, indicating that it will take 30 days for the legislature to move funds into the hands of businesses. Clearly there are good faith efforts being made as well as donations via not-for-profits, private entities and individuals. The question is: Will the funds make their way into the hands of those in need fast enough to preserve the businesses often built over many years and destroyed within a few hours? And will it be enough? We still see huge piles of rubble all along Lake Street six months after the historic nights of destruction. The cost of removal is often in the six-figure category, not to mention the cost to rebuild. Those with insurance get some relief, but rarely enough.

With rich, historic significance there is no doubt that Lake Street should be preserved. On this, most agree. Yet, questions remain regarding who will stay, who will go and what will be valued? Will we still be able to find the delicious ice cream at La Michoacana Purepecha? Will there ever be another Roberts Shoes? Can the hardware store where they know my first name remain? Can I walk on foot to buy groceries? Or will we have multiple Starbucks and formulaic shops such as Sephora and Urban Outfitters?

While funds get sorted out and distributed, maybe the city would be wise to at least reduce expenses for small businesses impacted by the unprecedented 2020 trouble, especially those who are currently diminished or inoperable.

Bloat

BY ED FELIEN

In ancient China, the state apparatus was 3,000 years old when the student revolts on May 4, 1919, began the Nationalist revolution that eventually overthrew the emperor. The bureaucracy was so far removed from the people that they spoke a different language. They had contempt for the needs of the average Chinese. They prided themselves on being out of touch and removed. The government was run from behind a walled compound forbidden to ordinary people.

Is that what is happening to Minneapolis in 2020?

Is our government so removed from the public that it is impenetrable?

Mayor Jacob Frey has said, "Transparency and accountability are of the highest priority for Chief Arradondo and me."

Really?

I have asked for years to see a line-item budget for the Minneapolis Police Department so that we, the taxpayers of Minneapolis who pay for all those salaries and benefits, can see how our money is being spent. I have asked and my answer has been the stone walls of silence and indifference—like the stone walls surrounding the Forbidden City in Beijing.

To give you a better idea of the mask of secrecy the city pulls over its questionable acts, I wrote the following to David M Rubedor, assistant city coordinator and Neighborhood Community Relations (NCR) director, who heads a burgeoning bureaucracy of 19:

"Hi David,

"I would appreciate your assistance in solving the mystery of some budget items in the 2020 Budget for the Nokomis East Neighborhood Association.

"I've written to Becky Timm, the executive director: 'Please send how you spent the $211,733' allocated for staff. There are, according to the NENA website, just two staff members, Becky and Karla Arredondo. After a week of meeting Becky's stonewall, I wrote to your neighborhood support specialist, Ethrophic Burnett:

"Hi Ethrophic,

"We are doing an article for Southside Pride on the upcoming cuts to the budgets of neighborhood organizations. I am puzzled by the budget for NENA that spends $211,000 on staff out of a total budget of $353,000. Could I see a breakdown of that budget item. As I understand it, NENA has two staff: an executive director and a community organizer.

"I would appreciate any help you could give in understanding this problem.

"thanks,"

"She told me her supervisor, Karen Moe, would contact me. I waited a couple of days and then wrote to Karen:

"Hi Karen,

"I have been trying for almost a week to get information about the budget for the Nokomis East Neighborhood Association. I would like an explanation of the staff budget item of $211,733 for 2020. The staff, according to their website, includes Becky Timm, executive director, and Karla Arredondo, community organizer. Is that the budget allocation for those two positions? Is that their combined salaries?

"We understand that the mayor is proposing reducing the budgets of neighborhood organizations, and, in order to appreciate the effects of these cuts, it is essential for our readers to fully understand how their tax money has been spent up to now.

"We would appreciate your assistance in helping us understand this problem by showing us a line-item budget for this organization."

"That was last week. I have received no answer. So, finally, I have arrived at your doorstep. My question is a simple one: How did NENA spend the $211,773 allocated for staff salaries?

"Your assistance in this matter would be greatly appreciated.

"Ed Felien"

I received this response from David Rubedor:

"Ed,

"I received your request as well as know you have emailed others at the City.

"As you are probably aware, media requests are coordinated through our Communications department. I've been in contact with them this morning and you should be hearing from them shortly.

"Let me know if you need further assistance.

"Thank you.

"David M Rubedor"

After this article was published in the Powderhorn edition, Casper Hill of the Communications Department contacted me:

"Regarding your questions about the Nokomis East Neighborhood Association's budget, the City can provide tax filing information. According to its 2018 Form 990, the NENA ED [Executive Director] made $72,840 along with other compensation of $8,354. From the budget submitted to NCR, in 2019, staff salaries were just over $199,300."

But the bureaucracy of the NCR pales in comparison to the bloated bureaucracy of the Planning Department. Compared to 19 people in NCR, the Community Planning and Economic Development Organizational Chart (updated Nov. 9, 2020) lists 242 staff people, plus 14 vacancies. And what does the Planning Department plan? For one thing, they have planned the extinction of small auto repair shops like Ira Azhakh's place on Lake Street (see Kay Schroven's piece "The battleground that is Lake Street" from page 14).

Oscar Wilde once said, "America is the only country that went from barbarism to decadence without civilization

tion in November demonstrate his support for white supremacy and colonial capitalism. He has demonstrated his preference for order over justice, for profits over people, and corporate interests over our collective future.

As a part of the 2020 presidential election, we saw a massive mobilization to get out the vote spearheaded by people like Ilhan Omar. As a result of these efforts Joe Biden won more votes in Hennepin County alone than Trump got in the entire state of Minnesota. The governor's term will be up in two years. That happens to be the perfect amount of time for someone to start working to challenge Walz, whether as a primary challenger or as a third-party candidate. The Democratic party establishment may not want to listen to the voices of people of color, but between urban voters in Hennepin and Ramsey Counties and the tribal communities in outstate Minnesota the power is with the people!
